Default Judgment

Introduction

A commonplace default judgment means a judgment made when one of the parties fails to meet their obligations relating to the case including appearing in court or responding to a claim. This leads to the court making its decision in favour of the other party.

Prevention

The best way to deal with a default judgment is not to have one happen in the first place. There are practical activities that include filing prompt response to court documents, seeking services of experienced legal professionals and observing timelines in courts.

Paper focuses

Some of the problems with default judgments include the following; If the defendant is denied an opportunity to defend themselves, then due process has not been followed, if there will be a time limitation as to when the defendant can defend the case and lastly, method in which the damages will be determined.
