WOMEN AFTER COVID-19

INTRODUCTION

The COVID-19 outbreak had a broad impact around the world and impacted client relations economically and socially. Although, there was one main vulnerable group namely women, across both workplaces and households. In the case “Women After COVID-19,” the author shows these challenges and discusses how work needs to be done to bring back some gender balance in life after COVID-19.

IMPACT

During the pandemic, women were laid-off more than men in the workforce mainly because the female employment is concentrated in sectors that were worst hit by the lockdown measures in areas like hospitality, education and health services. Besides, there were new burdens for women coming with remote work, placing an immense deal of obligation on childcare and domestic duties.

PATH FORWARD

In the post COVID-19 world, businesses, governments and societies should focus on the adoption of true policies for women's advancement. Empowering working women to afford and be able to balance their working and family responsibilities will also help households besides helping drive the recovery of global economies.
