

GRAN TIERRA ENERGY

Introduction

Exploration and production of oil and gas: A case of Gran Tierra Energy has been operating in the energy sector facing challenges such as volatility in prices and higher regulatory concerns. The whole picture of the company strategic positions, operational experience, and potential growth opportunities are covered in this case.

Company Overview

The organisation is relatively young and started its operation in 2003, with its headquarters at Calgary, Canada; is solely involved in oil exploration and production and operates in South America especially in Columbia and Argentina.

Strategic Challenges

The case analyses shows that Gran Tierra has numerous threats that may affect its growth path as follows. Among these risks it is important to occite the change in oil price because it influences revenue and profitability. Moreover, the company still faces some legal constraints in Colombia among which are environmental issues and community resistance to expansion.

Conclusion

The case solution generated from the Gran Tierra Energy case avails key lessons regarding the strategic planning processes involved in the oil and gas sector. This way, Gran Tierra can assess operational issues and successfully adjust to market conditions in order to await further development in the future.

Resource

This is just a sample partial case solution. Please place the order on the website to order your own originally done case solution.

Resource: visit thecasesolution.com for detailed analysis and more case studies.

