Giving Peace a
Chance: 2006-2008
Negotiations to End
Conflict in Uganda

Introduction

The "Giving Peace a Chance: The negotiations for ending conflict in Uganda, 2006-2008" case is based on the complex process of peace negotiation between the Ugandan government and the Lord's Resistance Army. Demire was peaceful as attempts were made to end its war after being raging for many years.

Realistic Difficulties

Among the major weaknesses, there was absolute lack of trust between the Ugandan authorities and the LRA. Years of violent conflict had led to bitter withdrawal; it became difficult to break down barriers to communication. Also, LRA's want list was not clear, and their irregular attendance to the negotiations remained a significant challenge.

Strategy and Resolution

The following was a cross section negotiation by various players including international mediators, regional governments and civil society organization. New directions towards future peace meant that Ugandan government needs to accept possibilities of compromises such as amnesty for the LRA war munces and their reintegration into society.

Conclusion

This calls for attention to the “Giving Peace a Chance” case that clearly shows that negotiating for peace in conflicts involving war crimes is not an easy task and mistrust from the warring factions runs deep. In the same light, continuation of negotiation shows that it is possible to attain the goals and objectives after several years of negotiation insisting the need for diplomacy and role played by international actors.
