GOING IT TOGETHER: COVENTRY'S COMMUNITY SAFETY PARTNERSHIP

INTRODUCTION

The "Going it Together: Alcohol focused enforcement: Coventry's Community Safety Partnership" case focuses on the working partnership of diverse organisations for enhancing the safety of the people of Coventry, a city of the United Kingdom. It is consist on crime prevention and community safety, focused on the cooperation between several organizations.

KEY CHALLENGES IDENTIFIED

The operations of the community safety partnership in Coventry had some pulls back as follows; I found one of the biggest challenges to have been the multiple-stakeholder situation in which everyone has his or her own interests. Many times it involved communications and networking between different organisations such as the local police, the local council and other community groups.

PROPOSED SOLUTIONS

The case presents some recommendations on how the respective challenges can be addressed. An important solution is the development of the efficient leadership within the partnership to reconcile goals of all participants. One of the key lessons learnt was that establishing well defined communication structure and status meetings with the various stakeholders enhanced their participation rates.

CONCLUSION

This paper uses the Coventry Community Safety Partnership case to establish the fact that partnership approach is crucial in managing emergent societal problems such as community safety. It was through cooperation of various stakeholders together with using data driven approaches that the CSP managed to realize the outlined improvements hence a success story for other comparable cities.
