

*The Massachusetts
National Guard Responds to the 2013 Boston
Marathon Bombing*

Introduction

The 2013 Boston Marathon bombing was a disaster that affected three people dead and over 260 injured. In this act, the most crucial force which helped in combating the affectation of the attack was the Massachusetts National Guard (MANG). Originally deployed for security purposes at the event, the Guard became relevant for rescue and search at the scene, thus displaying its relevance for domestic disasters.

National Guard

There were more than 400 personnel from the Massachusetts National Guard deployed at the scene to help in managing security for the marathon. When bombings occurred near the end line, members of MANG were quickly in a position to switch from providing support service to responding to bomb explosion.

Key Challenges

This comes as one of the main challenges that MANG faced especially during the bombing exercise; the environment is very dynamic. Ranging from ordinary unanticipated terrorist attack response to the coordinated efforts comprising of several agencies, the Guard is faced with the challenge of responding to different threats and ensuring security of the public.

Conclusion

Hence, the proper example of crisis management and coordination is the Massachusetts National Guard's training reaction to the Boston Marathon bombing incident. This they did by responding promptly to the disaster and involving several departments to mitigate the effects of the calamity, thus implying the significance of preparing for calamities in large event.
